

A TALE OF TWO FAMILIES,

Which Further Illustrates the Adage That "Truth is Stranger Than Fiction."

Speaking of the wife trade between August Richter and Mr. Baunmuller, in connection with the suit of Mrs. Richter against the Sentinel, a gentleman connected with the bar in this city related an incident which had fallen under his observation, and which is as strange in its results as the Richter-Baumuller complication. The story related is substantially as follows:

Several years ago a young Irishman and an attractive German servant girl were married in this city and settled down at house-keeping, evidently contented and happy in the choice which they had made of a life companion. Both were industrious and economical. The husband toiled at his trade day in and day out, while the wife kept her small but comfortable home in a neat, tidy condition, and added to the savings by frequently going out to do a day's work for a neighbor. At the end of three years the couple had saved $700, when the husband was seized with the Western fever, and like a great many others, left his friends, and selling his little household goods moved to Minnesota. Here they were lost sight of for a period of four years, when the wife returned to this city, accompanied by a sprightly German whom she had married in Minnesota. From her story, which was related to the lawyer in connection with some legal business which he transacted for her soon after the arrival of herself and husband, it was learned that upon reaching Minnesota differences arose between her and her Irish lord, she wishing to return to Indiana and he being determined to build up a fortune in the West. The more they contended, the more they loved each other, and their Celtic and Teutonic blood, and from words they finally came to blows.

In the Minnesota village in which they located there happened to reside a family in which the husband was a German and the wife of Irish descent. The two families lived close neighbors and were frequently together, in fact by intimate friends, and their society limited almost exclusively to each other's company. The strangeness of the situation, the Irishman married to a German girl in one case and the German married to an Irish girl in the other, led them frequently to speak of its singularity, and propositions for a trade were jokingly proposed on more than one occasion. In a short time the German woman, who had left her with her Irish husband had cause to suspect that the visits of the latter to the house of her neighbor were frequently made in a clandestine manner, and upon charging him with infidelity he acknowledged that he had learned to love the woman of his own nationality, who, he claimed, he himself, had been seduced in his matrimonial life. She was shocked at the declaration, but when the truth was forced upon her, and she began to contrast her neighbor's husband with her own, the admiration which she had felt for him on account of the national tie which existed between them she found to have taken a strong hold upon her affections, and the two families began to consider in earnest a mutual exchange of husbands and wives, and the details were all arranged and agreed to.

The family which had left this city then moved to another town in the same county, and in the course of a few months the two wives were divorced, the husbands making no defense against the proceedings. When the divorces had been granted the German woman and the husband of her neighbor started to return to this city and were married at the house of a friend at Chicago. The Irish couple immediately left Minnesota, and it is supposed were married in a Western State, to which they moved. Under the agreement the property of the two families was equally divided, and when the German lady reached this city, the husband found himself possessed of sufficient means to enter business in a small way. They are now living in this city, and are evidently happy and contented. Among the friends of the woman, who is now the mother of two children, it is generally supposed that her first husband died soon after leaving this city for Minnesota.

INTERESTING TO THE PUBLIC.

Wonderful Cures of Dr. Morey, of 319 1-2 Vine Street—Cases Cited, Many of Which Seem Miraculous.

Cincinnati has long been in need of an institution for the treatment of chronic diseases, deformities, hip joint disease, spinal curvatures, paralysis, diseases of eye, ear, head and throat, asthma, lung, cancer, skin, piles, rupture, etc. Such an institution has been permanently established at 279 1-2 Vine Street. The Principal in charge, Dr. Morey, is a physician and surgeon of recognized skill and ability of twenty-five years' experience. Formerly professor of Surgery in the Quincy Medical Institute, late connected with College of Physicians and Surgeons, of Poplar, Mo.

Dr. W. S. Campbell, of St. Louis Hospital Eye and Ear Department for women and children, says: "Dr. Morey can be relied on in the most critical cases." Dr. John M. Chislem, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., now of Bonfield, Tenn., says: "Dr. Morey is one of the most scientific physicians and surgeons in the Southwest." Dr. Murphy and Cox, noted physicians of Memphis, Mo., state that "Dr. Morey is a surgeon and oculist of great skill."

Mrs. Thos. Mansfield, of Scottsville, Allen County, Ky., states that she was afflicted with female disease, catarrh and general debility for years, treated by eminent physicians in Nashville, Louisville and in the East, without benefit. Dr. Morey restored her to health in a few months. Miss Becca Reed, Glasgow, Ky., was cross-eyed from infancy, both eyes very badly affected. Dr. Morey straightened them in a minute's time. Alfred Leaman, Centerville, Ind., cancer of nose and eye thirteen years' standing, cured in '81, in four months.

Mrs. Julius Smith, Vincennes, Ind., afflicted with female disease and general debility, treated at Surgical Institute in Indianapolis, also in Buffalo without benefit. Dr. Morey cured her entirely in four months.

"This is to certify that I reside five miles east of Scottsville, Allen County, Ky., that in 1863, while in the army, I took the sore eye, and in a short time went almost entirely blind. I was treated by many in the army, and many times, without much benefit. Was entirely blind for thirteen years before I applied to Dr. Morey. My case was pronounced incurable by many. I consulted the Doctor in the summer of 1878; he said by an operation and a course of treatment he could make me see to read coarse print and do any ordinary labor, and I am proud to say that he accomplished this in six months. My eyes now do not trouble me any, and I can see to go where I wish. I say to all afflicted with diseased eyes, consult the Doctor at once. JAMES ATWOOD.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of April, 1879. In testimony thereof, witness my hand and official seal." "G. W. HARRIS, Clerk A. C. C."

"J. D. E. Brown, resident of Scottsville, Allen County, Ky., hereby certifies that I was badly affected in 1878 with an aggravated case of dyspepsia and nervous debility. Was treated by the leading physicians here, and took various remedies prescribed by others, but of no avail. Gradually became worse. My case was considered hopeless, both by myself and friends. I applied to Dr. Morey. After thoroughly examining my case, and describing my symptoms better than I could, he said he could cure me. At once began with his treatment, and in four months was entirely well and have remained so ever since. I would recommend all the afflicted to consult the Doctor. "D. E. BROWN."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of April, 1879. In testimony thereof, witness my hand and official seal." "G. W. HARRIS, Clerk A. C. C."

GENTLEMEN'S FASHIONS

Spring and Summer, 1885.

What Will Be Worn.

TROUSERS.

Medium width stripes and small checks have the call, although a popular design is a large overshoot plaid in various shades and combinations of colors.

SUITINGS.

Home-spun goods are very popular, and will be worn exclusively in blacks, blues, gray and gray mixtures.

Plaids and checks will attract much attention. The Ughart or Highland plaid, Tartan plaid, in Cheviot and Saxony, Dublin twist, the Gordon suiting and Velour suitings will be the leaders.

Worsted suitings, in an endless variety of designs, with silk and pure worsted mixtures will be popular with the more natty dressers, for the reason that they make a neater appearing suit than the rougher goods; but as the season progresses and the weather becomes warmer the cheviot suitings will have the preference, because cheviot is a much coarser fabric, being more loosely woven and affording greater ventilation.

WORSTEDS.

The black, blue and brown worsteds, in narrow and medium wale diagonals, will be worn. For dress suits, fine wale diagonals are prime favorites. Only elderly gentlemen are found wearing broadcloth at this time.

OVERCOATINGS.

For spring overcoats dressed Meltons will take the lead. They are quite soft and made with a cloth finish, and can be found in many fashionable colors of light shades. Colored and mixed worsteds, covert overcoatings and Venetians will be worn.

VESTINGS.

White and colored vestings will be worn considerably during the coming season.

How It Will Be Worn.

DRESS COATS.

The regular swallow tail has, of course, the lead, and has undergone considerable change since last season. The roll will be smaller, with much neater lapels. The edges for all coats made from worsted are bound. White vests are very much used for dress purposes.

FROCK COATS.

The double-breasted frock is as popular as ever. The roll will be lower than last season and closed with four buttons. The lapels are faced with silk. Edges are either bound or flat braced.

CUTAWAY COATS.

Are more generally worn than ever. The three-button cutaway has superseded the four-button coat for the season. The most noticeable changes to be found are the increased length of waist and a corresponding decrease in the skirt. The one-button cutaway with soft roll will be considerably worn by certain classes. All worsted goods will be bound.

REMARKS.

Dress Suits are generally made with coat, vest and trousers of same material, but black satin or embossed silk is frequently used for the vest.

Morning Suits are generally made with coat and vest alike, and trousers of lighter color, checked, plaided or striped material. Next in popularity comes the full suit of same good, followed at a respectful distance by coat of dark goods, vest of fancy vesting, and pantaloons of lighter colored trousering.

Walking and Sack Suits are made with coat, vest and trousers alike. The Double-breasted Frock Suit, unless of light colored goods, is usually composed of coat and vest alike and light-colored trousers.

The tendency is to make everything larger than a year ago.
